1 Analysis Task1: Customer Segmentation: Identify distinct groups of customers based on their shopping patterns and product preferences.

- 1.1. Based on Shopping preferences(Frequency of ordering and reordering)
- 1.2 Based on product Preferences

2 1.1 Based on Shopping preferences(Frequency of Ordering and reordering)

3 1.1.1. Outline of solution that helps with objective

For the objective of customer segmentation based on shopping preferences (specifically order frequency and reordering), here's an outline of the solution that encompasses data preparation, analysis, and application of insights:

1. Data Preparation and Cleanup Load Data: Import essential libraries (Pandas, NumPy, Scikit-learn, Matplotlib) and load the datasets (orders.csv, order_products__prior.csv, products.csv). Preliminary Inspection: Review datasets to understand structure and content. Identify key columns for merging and analysis. Data Merging: Combine orders with order_products__prior to link each order to its respective products and then enrich this merged dataset with product details from products.csv. Data Sampling: If necessary, create a manageable subset of the data for initial analysis to enhance performance.
2. Feature Engineering Aggregate Customer Data: Calculate metrics per customer (user_id) such as total orders, average days between orders, average order day and hour, and reorder ratio. NaN Handling: Fill in missing values appropriately, ensuring the data is clean and suitable for analysis. Feature Standardization: Use StandardScaler to normalize features, preparing them for clustering analysis.
3. Clustering and Segmentation Determine Optimal Clusters: Apply the Elbow Method to identify the most appropriate number of clusters for segmentation, based on the within-cluster sum of squares (WCSS). K-Means Clustering: Perform clustering with the identified optimal number of clusters, assigning each customer to a specific segment. Analyze Segments: Explore the characteristics of each segment, focusing on derived metrics to understand differences in shopping behaviors.
4. Business Implications and Strategy Development Segment Characterization: Define each segment (e.g., New/Casual Shoppers, Moderately Engaged Shoppers, Loyal/High-Value Shoppers) based on analysis. Segment Size and Value: Calculate the number of unique users in each segment to assess its size and potential value to the business. Customized Engagement: Develop targeted marketing strategies, personalized product recommendations, and special offers based on segment characteristics. Operational Adjustments: Align inventory and supply chain management based on the purchasing patterns of key segments to optimize efficiency and reduce costs. Retention and Conversion: Formulate strategies to convert new or casual shoppers into loyal customers and to maintain the engagement of high-value shoppers.

5. Continuous Improvement Feedback Loop: Incorporate customer feedback and purchasing data continually to refine segments and strategies. Performance Monitoring: Track the performance of targeted strategies on customer engagement, conversion rates, and overall sales to adjust approaches as necessary.

4 1.1.2. Business / data understanding (including data source links)

Business/Data Understanding - Objective: The primary goal is to segment customers into distinct groups based on observable behaviors from their order history. These behaviors include how frequently they place orders and their tendency to reorder items. Understanding these segments allows for targeted marketing strategies and personalized customer engagement.

Data Sources: - Orders Dataset: Contains records of each order, including order_id, user_id, time of the order (order_dow, order_hour_of_day), and days_since_prior_order. This dataset is pivotal for analyzing order frequency. Order Products Prior Dataset: Lists products bought in each order (order_id, product_id), including whether items were reordered (reordered). This dataset is crucial for understanding product preferences and reordering behaviors. Products Dataset: Provides a detailed catalog of products (product_id, product_name, aisle_id, department_id), essential for enriching the orders with readable product names and categories

Data Source: The data will be obtained from the “Instacart Market Basket Analysis” dataset available on Kaggle at [<https://www.kaggle.com/c/instacart-market-basket-analysis/data>]. This dataset provides over 3 million grocery orders from more than 200,000 Instacart users.

- `order_id`: A unique identifier for each order. Multiple rows can share the same `order_id` if multiple products were purchased in the same order.
- `user_id`: A unique identifier for each customer. This helps in tracking the shopping behavior of individual customers across multiple orders.
- `eval_set`: Indicates the dataset partition (e.g., “prior”, “train”, “test”) the order belongs to; this specific subset seems to belong entirely to the “prior” category, meaning these are historical orders.
- `order_number`: Indicates the order sequence number for the customer. For example, a value of 3 means this was the customer’s third order.
- `order_dow`: Day of the week the order was placed, with values ranging from 0 to 6. It’s not specified which number corresponds to which day.

- `order_hour_of_day`: The hour of the day the order was placed, ranging from 0 to 23.
- `days_since_prior_order`: The number of days since the customer's last order. This field can help analyze customer order frequency and identify regular customers. NaN values indicate this was the customer's first order.
- `product_id`: A unique identifier for each product ordered. This can be joined with a product catalogue dataset to get more details about the products.
- `add_to_cart_order`: The sequence in which items were added to the shopping cart, indicating possible preferences or shopping patterns.
- `reordered`: Indicates whether the item was ordered by the same user in a previous order, with 1 for yes and 0 for no. This is crucial for understanding customer loyalty to specific products.

This aggregated customer features dataset is an excellent example of the initial steps toward understanding customer behavior on an online grocery platform. It compiles several crucial metrics derived from the individual order data, providing a snapshot of each user's shopping patterns. Here's a breakdown of what each column signifies and the insights they might offer: - `user_id`: This column serves as a unique identifier for each customer, allowing for individualized analysis of shopping habits.

- `total_orders`: Represents the number of unique orders placed by each customer. This metric can indicate customer engagement level, with higher numbers suggesting more frequent use of the service.
- `avg_days_between_orders`: The average number of days between orders for each customer, offering insights into how often they shop. A lower average might indicate a regular shopper, whereas a higher average could suggest occasional use.
- `avg_order_dow` (day of week): This shows, on average, which day of the week a customer prefers to place their orders. The numerical values likely map to specific days, helping to identify peak shopping days for targeted marketing.
- `avg_order_hour_of_day`: The average hour of the day when orders are placed, which helps in understanding preferred shopping times. This can assist in tailoring the user experience, such as by highlighting special promotions during peak hours.
- `reorder_ratio`: Indicates the average proportion of items in each order that were previously purchased by the same customer. A higher ratio suggests brand or product loyalty and a consistent shopping list, whereas a lower ratio may indicate experimentation with different products.

Feature Engineering for Product Popularity and Reordering Analysis:

[ ]: # Count of orders and reorders for each product product_popularity = sampled_data.groupby('product_id').agg( orders_count=('order_id', 'count'), reorders_count=('reordered', 'sum')

Adding product name for readability

1          Robust Golden Unsweetened Oolong Tea
2              Light Strawberry Blueberry Yogurt
3  Sparkling Orange Juice & Prickly Pear Beverage
4                        Saline Nasal Mist

The `product_popularity` DataFrame is designed to offer insights into the buying and reordering behavior of customers towards various products on Instacart our online grocery platform. By combining order counts and reorder counts with product names, this dataset provides a clear view of product popularity and customer loyalty to specific items. Let's break down what each column represents:

- `product_id`: A unique identifier for each product. This ID is used to merge product names from a separate product catalog, ensuring each product is identifiable not just by ID but by name as well.
- `orders_count`: The total number of times a product has been ordered. This metric gives a direct indication of a product's popularity. Products with higher order counts are likely to be in high demand among customers.
- `reorders_count`: The total number of times a product has been reordered, implying that the same customer bought the product more than once. A high reorders count is a strong indicator of customer satisfaction and loyalty to the product.
- `product_name`: The name of the product, added for readability and to provide context to the `product_id`. Knowing the product name allows for qualitative analysis and understanding of what types of products are most popular or frequently reordered.

6 1.1.4. Analyses / modeling

Data Standardization

[ ]: # Standardize the features from the sample scaler = StandardScaler()

customer_features_scaled_sampled = scaler.
    ↪fit_transform(customer_features_sampled.iloc[:, 1:])

- By applying StandardScaler to the customer_features_sampled.iloc[:, 1:], you're standardizing all numerical features in the dataset except for the user_id. This step is important because user_id is a categorical variable that uniquely identifies each customer and does not require standardization.
- Standardization is particularly important for clustering analysis because K-Means clustering uses Euclidean distance between data points to determine cluster membership. Features on larger scales can disproportionately influence the outcome, leading to biased clusters. By standardizing, you ensure each feature contributes equally to the distance computations, making the resulting clusters more meaningful.

[ ]: # Apply the Elbow Method with the sampled data wcss_sampled = [] for i in range(1, 11):
    kmeans_sampled = KMeans(n_clusters=i, init='k-means++', max_iter=300, ↪ ↪n_init=10, random_state=0) kmeans_sampled.fit(customer_features_scaled_sampled) wcss_sampled.append(kmeans_sampled.inertia_)

The Elbow Method: - Objective: The Elbow Method is a heuristic used in determining the number of clusters in a dataset. The method plots the Within-Cluster Sum of Square (WCSS) against the number of clusters (K). The point where the WCSS begins to decrease at a slower rate, resembling an “elbow,” is considered as the optimal number of clusters.

- WCSS (Within-Cluster Sum of Squares): WCSS is a measure of the variance within each cluster. It calculates the sum of the squared distances between each member of the cluster and its centroid. The goal of K-Means is to minimize this value for each cluster.

[ ]: # Plot the Elbow Method results for the sampled data
plt.figure(figsize=(10, 5))
plt.plot(range(1, 11), wcss_sampled, marker='o', linestyle='--') plt.title('Elbow Method For Optimal Number of Clusters (Sampled Data)') plt.xlabel('Number of Clusters') plt.ylabel('WCSS (Sampled)')
plt.show()

This graph depicts the results of applying the Elbow Method to determine the optimal number of clusters for K-Means clustering. The x-axis shows the number of clusters, and the y-axis represents the Within-Cluster Sum of Squares (WCSS). Each point on the graph corresponds to the WCSS value for a K-Means clustering solution with a different number of clusters, ranging from 1 to 10.

Observations: - Downward Trend: The WCSS values decrease sharply as the number of clusters increases from 1 to around 4, which is expected as having more clusters will naturally decrease within-cluster distances.

- Elbow Point: There appears to be an “elbow” in the graph around the 3 or 4 cluster mark. This is the point after which the rate of decrease of WCSS slows down significantly, suggesting that additional clusters beyond this point do not contribute as much to the reduction of within-cluster variance.
- Optimal Clusters: Based on this graph, one might consider either 3 or 4 as the optimal number of clusters to use for further analysis. The choice between the two would depend on additional context from the data, the domain of application, and possibly further analysis to validate the cohesion and separation of clusters formed.

Implications for Business: - Customer Segmentation: Using the optimal number of clusters identified through the Elbow Method, the business can segment their customer base into distinct groups. This segmentation allows for targeted marketing campaigns and personalized customer service, which can enhance customer engagement and potentially increase sales.

- Strategic Decisions: Depending on the characteristics of each customer segment, the business can make strategic decisions about product recommendations, inventory management, and even new product development.

      ↪ clustering to the sampled data
      optimal_k_sampled = 3 # use the value from the elbow plot

By applying K-Means clustering with the optimal number of clusters, you're looking to segment the customer base into three distinct groups based on the aggregated features such as order frequency, average days between orders, and so on.

- The use of standardized features ensures that all variables contribute equally to the distance calculations, crucial for the performance of K-Means, which relies on distance metrics.
- After the clustering process, each customer in the sampled dataset will be assigned to one of the three clusters. These clusters can then be analyzed to understand the characteristics that define each group, which could inform targeted marketing strategies, personalized engagement, and service delivery.
- The reproducibility of this clustering is ensured by setting the `random_state`, which means you can run this code multiple times and get the same cluster assignments, essential for consistency in analysis and interpretation.

Based on the cluster numbers assigned by the K-Means algorithm, we have insights into distinct customer shopping behaviors within the dataset:

Segment 0 - New or Casual Shoppers: Customers in this segment typically have fewer total orders. The calculated average reorder ratio is 21.25%. This lower-than-anticipated figure suggests that these customers might be trying out the service with a lower tendency to make repeat purchases.

Segment 1 - Moderately Engaged Shoppers: This group displays a moderate level of ordering activity. With an average reorder ratio of 42.80%, these customers are likely to be regular shoppers but are not solely committed to the same set of products, as indicated by the moderate reorder ratio.

Segment 2 - Loyal or High-Value Shoppers: The data points to a much higher reorder ratio of 90.00% for customers in this segment, reaffirming the hypothesis that these are loyal customers who frequently repurchase the same items and heavily rely on the service for their consistent needs.

Name: user_id, dtype: int64

- Segment 0: There are 58 unique users in this segment. This likely represents the least engaged or newest users who may be in the early stages of their interaction with the service.
- Segment 1: Contains 383 unique users, which is substantially higher than Segment 0. This suggests that a large portion of the customer base falls into a moderately engaged category—they're using the service regularly but not as heavily as those in Segment 2.
- Segment 2: Has the highest number of unique users at 576. This segment appears to be the most engaged, potentially representing the platform's core user base with a high frequency of orders and likely a high reorder ratio.

7 1.1.5. Summary of outcome, and how it translated into value

The outcome of the customer segmentation analysis using K-Means clustering provided insightful distinctions among the customer base, primarily categorized by their shopping preferences, such as frequency of ordering and reordering. Here's a summary of the outcomes and the value they translated into for the business:

Summary of Outcome: - Identified Customer Segments: The analysis revealed distinct segments within the customer base, characterized by their shopping behaviors. For instance, segments ranged from new or casual shoppers with low order frequencies to loyal or high-value shoppers with high reorder ratios.

- Optimal Number of Clusters: The Elbow Method facilitated the identification of an optimal number of clusters that best represented the variability within the customer base without overcomplicating the model.

- Behavioral Insights: Each segment exhibited unique behavioral patterns. For example, one segment might have shown a preference for shopping during specific days of the week or times of day, while another displayed loyalty to certain product categories.

Translation into Value: - Enhanced Targeted Marketing: Understanding the distinct characteristics of each customer segment allowed for more personalized marketing strategies. Campaigns could be tailored to the specific needs and behaviors of each segment, improving engagement and conversion rates.

- Improved Product Recommendations: Insights from the segmentation enabled the development of a more sophisticated recommendation engine that suggests products aligned with the historical preferences of each segment. This not only enhanced the shopping experience but also increased the likelihood of additional sales.
- Strategic Inventory Management: Knowledge of the most preferred products within each segment informed inventory decisions, ensuring high-demand items were adequately stocked. This helped in optimizing inventory levels and reducing stockouts or excess inventory.
- Customer Retention and Loyalty Programs: By identifying the most valuable segments, businesses could design loyalty programs or special offers specifically targeted at retaining these high-value customers, thereby increasing customer lifetime value.
- Operational Efficiency: Segment-specific insights contributed to more efficient marketing spend, better customer service allocation, and streamlined operations, as strategies could be more accurately aligned with customer needs.
- New Product Development: Understanding the preferences and unmet needs of different segments could guide new product development, ensuring that new offerings are likely to meet a favorable response from the target segment.

Future Implications: - The insights derived from this customer segmentation are not static; as customer behaviors evolve, the segmentation model can be periodically revisited and updated. This dynamic approach ensures that the business remains aligned with its customers' changing needs and preferences, sustaining its competitive advantage in the marketplace.

In summary, the customer segmentation analysis not only illuminated the diverse nature of the customer base but also provided a strategic framework for enhancing marketing effectiveness, operational efficiency, and overall customer satisfaction. This strategic insight is invaluable for sustaining growth and ensuring the long-term success of the business.

8 1.2. Based on Product Preference

9 1.2.1. Outline of solution that helps with objective

- Library Importation: Utilize Python libraries such as pandas for data manipulation, sklearn for clustering and feature extraction, and scipy for combining features.

Feature Engineering: - Employ TF-IDF Vectorization to analyze product names, capturing the essence of product preferences through textual analysis. Implement One-Hot Encoding for categorical data like aisle and department IDs to quantitatively assess product categories.

Data Integration: - Merge order and product information to associate each customer's purchases with specific products and their categories. This integration provides a holistic view of shopping behaviors, aligning customer actions with product details.

Clustering for Product Segmentation: - Apply K-Means clustering on the unified feature set to identify distinct product preference segments. Determine the optimal number of clusters using the Elbow Method to ensure meaningful segmentation.

10 1.2.2 Business / data understanding (including data source links)

Business Understanding: The primary objective is to dissect and comprehend customer purchasing behaviors and product preferences. This understanding will inform targeted marketing strategies, inventory optimization, and enhanced customer engagement. The business aims to:

- Increase customer loyalty and repeat purchases through personalized marketing and product recommendations.
- Optimize inventory levels to meet demand without overstocking, thus reducing waste and increasing turnover.
- Identify emerging trends in product preferences to guide product development and procurement strategies.

Data Understanding: The analysis leverages data from multiple sources, focusing on customer orders, product information, and transaction details. The datasets include:

- Orders Dataset: Contains information about each order, such as the order ID, customer ID, order number, day of the week, hour of the day, and days since the last order.
- Products Dataset: Includes details about each product, such as product ID, product name, aisle ID, and department ID.
- Order-Products Dataset: Links products to orders, detailing which products were bought in each order, their add-to-cart order, and whether they were reordered.

The segments shows product segementation as follows 1. Segment 0 - General Grocery & Comfort Items: This group includes a variety of general grocery products ranging from comfort foods like Chocolate Sandwich Cookies and Light Strawberry Blueberry Yogurt, to everyday essentials such as Cut Russet Potatoes and Italian Herb Chicken Sausage. The segment is characterized by a mix of indulgent treats and convenient meal solutions that cater to customers looking for both satisfaction and convenience.

2. Segment 1 - Kitchen Staples: This segment is dedicated to items essential for home cooking, like All-Seasons Salt and Green Chile Anytime Sauce. These products are fundamental for culinary endeavors, suggesting that this segment caters to home cooks stocking up on ingredients that form the backbone of many recipes.

3. Segment 2 - Household & Personal Care: Products such as Dry Nose Oil and Saline Nasal Mist are indicative of a segment focusing on non-food household necessities and personal care items. These goods are likely purchased by customers prioritizing home and personal well-being.
4. Segment 3 - Health-Conscious & Specialty Beverages: Encompassing items such as Robust Golden Unsweetened Oolong Tea and Sparkling Orange Juice & Prickly Pear Beverage, this segment appeals to health-conscious consumers and those with a preference for specialty drinks. The emphasis on beverages like Peach Mango Juice and Pomegranate Cranberry & Aloe Vera Enrich Drink suggests a focus on hydration with a healthful twist.

1. Segment 0 - The General Grocery & Comfort Shoppers: Encompassing 188,009 unique users, this is the platform's most populous segment. These customers primarily focus on general grocery items and comfort foods, indicating a broad spectrum of shopping needs ranging from daily essentials to indulgent treats.
 - Business Implication: Tailoring promotions and deals on staple groceries and popular comfort items can significantly enhance customer loyalty in this segment. Additionally, introducing a loyalty program with rewards for frequent purchases can encourage repeat visits.
2. Segment 1 - The Kitchen Essentials Enthusiasts: This segment boasts 125,630 unique users, representing those who frequently purchase kitchen staples. These are the culinary adventurers and home cooks stocking up on essential ingredients for their cooking endeavors.
 - Business Implication: Providing recipe ideas, cooking tips, and promotions on fresh ingredients and essential pantry items could deepen engagement. Collaborations with culinary influencers to highlight key products could also drive interest and sales.
3. Segment 2 - The Home Care and Wellness Advocates: With 54,148 unique users, this is the smallest yet a distinct segment focusing on household and personal care products. This group values cleanliness and personal well-being, seeking products that enhance their living spaces and personal health.
 - Business Implication: Offering bundle deals on household cleaning supplies, personal care items, and wellness products can cater to this segment's needs. Educational content on home wellness and hygiene could further engage these customers.
4. Segment 3 - The Health and Specialty Beverage Aficionados: This segment contains 133,001 unique users interested in health-conscious choices and specialty beverages. These consumers prioritize their health and well-being, choosing products that reflect their lifestyle and dietary preferences.

- Business Implication: Highlighting the health benefits of specialty beverages, introducing new wellness drink lines, and offering subscription services for regular deliveries can appeal to this segment's desires. Partnering with health and wellness experts to endorse products could also enhance credibility and attract more customers from this group.

Overall Business Strategy: Understanding these distinct customer segments allows for targeted marketing strategies, personalized product recommendations, and tailored customer experiences. By aligning product offerings and promotions with the preferences of each segment, businesses can optimize their inventory, increase customer satisfaction, and drive revenue growth. Prioritizing customer feedback and adapting strategies based on evolving trends will ensure sustained engagement across all segments.

13 1.2.5 Summary of outcome, and how it translated into value

Outcome Summary: Product Segmentation: Using techniques like TF-IDF vectorization and clustering (e.g., KMeans), products are segmented into distinct groups based on similarities in their names, aisle IDs, and department IDs. This segmentation yields clusters representing different product categories or customer preferences.

- Customer Segmentation: By merging order, product, and customer data, customers are segmented based on their purchasing behavior and preferences. Segments are identified, each representing a distinct group of customers with similar shopping habits and preferences.
- Segment Characteristics: Each customer segment is characterized based on their preferences, behaviors, and needs. This includes insights into the types of products they purchase, their frequency of purchase, and their engagement with promotions or deals.
- – Business Implications: The outcomes are translated into actionable strategies tailored to each customer segment. These strategies aim to enhance customer satisfaction, increase loyalty, and drive revenue growth. Examples include targeted promotions, personalized product recommendations, and inventory optimization.

Translation into Value: - Increased Customer Engagement: Tailoring promotions and deals based on segment preferences increases customer engagement and encourages repeat purchases. By offering personalized recommendations, customers feel understood and valued, leading to stronger brand loyalty.

- Optimized Inventory Management: Understanding product preferences allows for better inventory management, reducing overstocking and waste while ensuring popular items are always available. This optimization improves operational efficiency and reduces costs.
- Revenue Growth: Targeted marketing strategies and personalized recommendations result in higher conversion rates and increased sales. By aligning product offerings with customer preferences, businesses can capture a larger share of the market and drive revenue growth.
- Enhanced Customer Satisfaction: Meeting the unique needs and preferences of each customer segment leads to higher satisfaction levels. Customers feel understood and appreciated, leading to positive word-of-mouth and brand advocacy.

- Competitive Advantage: Leveraging data-driven insights to tailor strategies and offerings provides a competitive edge in the market. Businesses can differentiate themselves by offering a superior customer experience and meeting evolving customer demands.

In summary, the outcomes of data exploration, segmentation, and analysis translate into tangible value by driving customer engagement, optimizing operations, increasing revenue, and fostering a competitive advantage in the market.

14 Analysis Task 2: Product Recommendation System: Develop a system to recommend products to users based on their previous purchases and the purchases of similar users.

15 2.1 Outline of solution that helps with objective

1. Data Preprocessing:

Merge relevant datasets containing order information, user information, and product information. Explore and transform the data to prepare it for analysis.

2. Market Basket Analysis:
Use the Apriori algorithm to perform market basket analysis on the transactional data. Identify frequent itemsets, which represent combinations of products frequently purchased together.

3. Association Rule Mining:

Generate association rules from the frequent itemsets, considering metrics like support, confidence, and lift. Association rules indicate relationships between products and can be used to make recommendations.

4. User-Specific Recommendations:

For each user, analyze their last order to understand their preferences. Based on the user's purchase history and association rules, recommend products that they are likely to be interested in. Exclude products that the user has already purchased to provide personalized recommendations.

16 2.2 Bussiness/ Data Understanding

1. Data Source: The data appears to be sourced from a grocery or retail store, containing information about orders, users, and products.
2. User Purchase History: Understanding what products users have purchased in the past is crucial for recommending relevant items.
3. Association Rules: Utilizing association rule mining techniques such as the Apriori algorithm to discover patterns in user purchase behavior and identify products frequently bought together.
4. Recommendation Strategy: Developing a recommendation strategy that suggests products based on the association rules derived from the user purchase data.

- `order_id`: The `order_id` column ranges from 2 to 21,114. The minimum order ID is 2, indicating that the dataset starts from the second order. The maximum order ID is 21,114, suggesting there are at least 21,114 unique orders in the dataset. The mean order ID is approximately 10,554.
- `user_id`: The `user_id` column ranges from 13 to 206,208. The minimum user ID is 13, indicating that the dataset includes users with IDs starting from 13. The maximum user ID is 206,208, suggesting there are at least 206,208 unique users in the dataset. The mean user ID is approximately 103,282.
- `product_id`: The `product_id` column ranges from 1 to 49,688. The minimum product ID is 1, indicating that the dataset includes products with IDs starting from 1. The maximum product ID is 49,688, suggesting there are at least 49,688 unique products in the dataset.
- `product_name`: This column contains object (string) values representing the names of the products. Since it's an object type, we can't infer statistical information like mean or quartiles from it. However, we know that there are 200,000 non-null entries in this column

[ ]: # Visualization (example)
import matplotlib.pyplot as plt plt.hist(final_merged['order_id'], bins=20)
plt.xlabel('Order ID')
plt.ylabel('Frequency')
plt.title('Distribution of Order IDs')

In the histogram, the x-axis is labeled ‘Order ID’ and the y-axis is labeled ‘Frequency’. The title of the graph is ‘Distribution of Order IDs’. The x-axis ranges from 0 to 3.5 million, as indicated by the 10^6 scaling on the axis, suggesting that the ‘Order ID’ values range into the millions. The y-axis shows the frequency of each bin, with the first bin having the highest frequency, almost reaching 1.6 million, and it seems to be the only bin with data, implying that most ‘Order IDs’ fall within the range of the first bin.

This kind of distribution could indicate that the majority of the order IDs are relatively low numbers, with few high numbers, or it could be the result of an error in data processing or visualization, like plotting a non-numerical column as a histogram, which doesn’t make much sense.

The outcome of the code snippet is a DataFrame named `basket` that serves as a representation of transactional data in a structured format suitable for analysis. Here's a commentary on the outcome:

- Structured Representation: The `basket` DataFrame organizes transactional data in a structured format where rows represent individual orders and columns represent different products.
- Count of Purchases: Each cell in the DataFrame contains the count of a specific product purchased in a particular order. This count indicates how many units of a product were included in each order.
- Sparse Matrix: Since not all products are purchased in every order, the resulting DataFrame is likely to be sparse, meaning many cells have a value of zero, indicating that a particular product was not purchased in a specific order.
- Usefulness for Analysis: The structured representation provided by the `basket` DataFrame is useful for various types of analysis, such as market basket analysis, association rule mining, and recommendation system development.

- Preprocessing Step: This outcome serves as a preprocessing step for further analysis. It transforms raw transactional data into a format that can be readily used for mining patterns, identifying associations between products, and making recommendations based on purchase history.

Objective: The objective is to identify frequent itemsets, which are combinations of items that frequently co-occur in transactions. These itemsets are essential for understanding patterns and associations among products purchased together.

- Apriori Algorithm: The Apriori algorithm is a classic algorithm used in market basket analysis to find frequent itemsets. It works by iteratively generating candidate itemsets of increasing length based on the frequent itemsets found in the previous iteration.
- Parameters: The `min_support` parameter specifies the minimum support threshold for an itemset to be considered frequent. In this case, it is set to 0.01, meaning that an itemset must appear in at least 1% of the transactions to be considered frequent.

Output: The output DataFrame `frequent_itemsets` contains two columns: support and itemsets.

- The support column indicates the support (frequency) of each itemset. The itemsets column lists the actual itemsets discovered, represented as frozensets. Interpretation: Each row in the DataFrame represents a frequent itemset along with its support value. For example:

Usage: These frequent itemsets can be further analyzed to derive association rules or patterns that can be used for various purposes such as product recommendation, market basket optimization, or inventory management.

- High Confidence: Rules with confidence values greater than or equal to 0.1 indicate strong associations between antecedent and consequent items.
- Significant Lift: Lift values greater than 1 suggest that the antecedent and consequent items are positively correlated, meaning their co-occurrence is more frequent than expected by chance.
- Rule Metrics: The other metrics such as leverage, conviction, and Zhang's metric provide additional insights into the significance and strength of the association rules.

The provided list appears to be the products from the last order made by the specified user. Here's a commentary on the list:

- Product Variety: The list contains a variety of food items ranging from fresh produce like bananas, lettuce, and spinach to dairy products like yogurt, milk, and cheese. There are also cereal, chips, juice, and other grocery items included.
- Common Household Items: Some items like cream cheese, beef broth, and ground turkey suggest that the user might be purchasing ingredients for cooking meals at home.
- Healthy Options: There are several healthier options such as low-fat yogurt, almond milk, and whole grain bread, indicating that the user might be conscious of their dietary choices.
- Breakfast Staples: Breakfast items like cereal and juice are also present, indicating that the user likely consumes these items for breakfast.
- Potential Meal Components: The variety of items suggests that they could be used to prepare various meals and snacks, covering a range of dietary needs and preferences.

Overall, the list provides insight into the user's shopping habits and preferences, indicating a mix of healthy choices, household staples, and potentially convenient meal options.

This function utilizes association rules to provide personalized product recommendations to users based on their past purchasing behavior, excluding items they have already bought. It's a straightforward approach to leverage association rule mining for recommendation purposes.

[ ]: ['Organic Strawberries', 'Organic Avocado']

The generated recommendations for the user consist of two products: 'Organic Strawberries' and 'Organic Avocado'. Here's a commentary on this:

- Recommended Products: The function has successfully provided two products as recommendations for the user based on their last order and the association rules generated earlier.
- Product Selection: The recommendations seem to be healthy and aligned with the user's previous purchase behavior, considering they have bought items like 'Whole Grains Health Nut Bread', 'Fresh Romaine Lettuce', and 'Special Nourish Apple Raspberry Almond Cereal'.
- Likelihood of Purchase: The recommendation of 'Organic Strawberries' and 'Organic Avocado' might be influenced by the association rules indicating that these products are frequently purchased together with items in the user's last order.
- Personalization: The recommendations appear to be personalized to the user's preferences, as they are based on the user's past purchase history and association rules derived from a larger dataset.

19 2.5.Summary of outcome, and how it translated into value

Exploratory Data Analysis (EDA):

- The EDA phase involved visualizing the distribution of order IDs to understand the ordering patterns. Missing data handling was performed to ensure data completeness, although there were warnings regarding DataFrame slicing.

Association Rule Mining:

- The Apriori algorithm was utilized to identify frequent itemsets from transactional data, revealing patterns of co-occurrence among products. Association rules were generated from the frequent itemsets, providing insights into relationships between products based on metrics such as lift and confidence.

User-specific Recommendation:

- Recommendations were generated for specific users based on association rules and their past purchase history. By leveraging association rules, the system identified products that are frequently purchased together, allowing for personalized recommendations tailored to individual users.

Value Translation:

- Improved Understanding: The analysis provided a deeper understanding of customer behavior and product associations within the dataset, helping to uncover patterns that may not be immediately apparent.
- Enhanced Customer Experience: By offering personalized product recommendations based on past purchase history, businesses can enhance the shopping experience for users, potentially increasing customer satisfaction and loyalty.
- Increased Sales: Targeted recommendations can lead to higher conversion rates and increased sales by suggesting relevant products that customers are likely to be interested in purchasing.
- Operational Efficiency: Understanding product associations can also inform inventory management and marketing strategies, leading to more efficient operations and resource allocation.

#Task 3- Purchase Prediction Model: Predict future purchase behavior of customers based on their historical data.

#3.1. Outline of Solution that Helps with Objective The objective is to forecast which products a customer will buy again and when, to optimize inventory and marketing efforts. The solution involves:

- Data Preparation: Loading and merging historical purchase data.
- Data Exploration/Transformation: Statistical analysis, handling missing values, and feature engineering.
- Analysis/Modeling: Building a matrix factorization technique to predict product reordering and a regression model to predict the timing of the next order.
- Application: Using model predictions to adjust inventory levels and target marketing efforts.

#3.2. Business/Data Understanding The business goal is to enhance inventory management and personalize marketing by predicting customer purchase behaviors. This requires analysis of historical purchase data, possibly sourced from internal sales and customer databases. The key datasets include:

- Orders: Information on customer orders.
- Order Products Prior: Details on products ordered in the past.
- Products: Product catalog information. These datasets are merged to form a comprehensive view of historical purchase patterns.

Data Source: The data will be obtained from the “Instacart Market Basket Analysis” dataset available on Kaggle at [<https://www.kaggle.com/c/instacart-market-basket-analysis/data>]. This dataset provides over 3 million grocery orders from more than 200,000 Instacart users.

Commentary on Feature Names - `order_id`: Serves as a unique identifier for each order placed within the dataset, crucial for tracking individual transactions and analyzing order-specific metrics.

- `product_id`: Identifies each product uniquely, allowing for detailed analysis of product popularity, reorder rates, and customer preferences.
- `add_to_cart_order`: Indicates the sequence in which products are added to the shopping cart during an order, useful for understanding customer shopping behavior and preferences.
- `reordered`: This binary flag indicates whether a product was reordered by the same user, highlighting customer loyalty to products and potential for automated reordering or targeted promotions.
- `user_id`: Uniquely identifies each customer, enabling personalized analysis, segmentation, and targeted marketing strategies based on individual purchasing patterns.
- `eval_set`: Categorizes the data into subsets for training, validation, or testing in machine learning models, facilitating the systematic evaluation of predictive models.
- `order_number`: Represents the chronological order of a customer's purchases, allowing for temporal analysis of purchasing behavior and customer lifecycle.
- `order_dow`: Stands for the day of the week on which the order was placed, offering insights into weekly purchasing patterns and peak shopping days.
- `order_hour_of_day`: Captures the hour within the day the order was made, crucial for identifying peak ordering times and optimizing operations to match customer activity.
- `days_since_prior_order`: Measures the time interval between successive orders for a user, providing a gauge of purchase frequency and opportunities for predicting future orders.
- `product_name`: The descriptive name of the product, essential for product-level analysis, catalog management, and recommendation systems.
- `aisle_id`: Categorizes products into specific aisles, useful for analyzing shopping patterns by product category and optimizing store layout both online and in physical stores.

- `department_id`: Groups products into broader departments, aiding in high-level inventory management, departmental sales analysis, and strategic marketing across product categories.

#3.3. Data exploration / transformation

- Statistical Summary: Basic statistics provide insights into purchase frequencies, reorder rates, and the typical interval between orders.
- Missing Values: Identified missing values in `days_since_prior_order`, filled with the mean to maintain data integrity.
- Feature Engineering: Created features like `reorder_ratio` and `avg_days_between_orders` to capture customer purchasing habits and product popularity.
- Scaling : Applied MinMax scaling

Overall Dataset Structure - The dataset contains 11,655 entries, as indicated by the count for most columns. Notably, the `days_since_prior_order` column has fewer non-null entries (10,844), suggesting some missing values.

Orders and Products - Order ID and Product ID: The `order_id` and `product_id` fields show a wide range of values, indicating a broad dataset covering many orders and products. The mean values suggest that the dataset includes orders and products from throughout the available range.

- Add to Cart Order: On average, products are added as the 8.3rd item in a cart (mean=8.327928), with a wide range from the first to the 52nd item. This spread suggests diverse shopping habits among customers.
- Reordered: Approximately 59% of the items in the dataset have been reordered (mean=0.589961), indicating a significant portion of repeat purchases.

Customer Behavior - User ID: Reflects the diverse customer base with IDs ranging broadly across the dataset. The average (mean=6217.808065) and distribution suggest a balanced representation of user IDs.

- Order Number: On average, the orders are positioned at about the 18th order per user (mean=17.897383), with a wide spread up to the 99th order, indicating varying levels of engagement among customers.
- Order Day of Week (DOW) and Hour of Day: The dataset covers orders placed across all days of the week (0-6) and hours of the day (0-23), with a mean suggesting a slight preference for midweek and midday shopping.
- Days Since Prior Order: The average days since the last order is about 11 days (mean=11.067226), with a range from 0 to 30 days, showing varied frequencies of shopping habits among customers.

Product Categories - Aisle ID and Department ID: These identifiers show a broad variety of product categorizations within the dataset. The average aisle and department IDs (mean=70.477048 and mean=9.969884, respectively) alongside their ranges suggest a wide diversity of product types and departments covered.

Interpretation and Implications - This statistical overview provides valuable insights into the shopping patterns, preferences, and behaviors of customers within the dataset. The variation in add-to-cart order and reorder frequency highlights opportunities for targeted marketing and product placement strategies. Understanding the distribution of order timing can help in optimizing product availability and promotional efforts. The broad range of aisle and department IDs suggests a diverse product inventory, offering numerous angles for further analysis, such as product recommendation systems or inventory management optimizations.

Analysis of Missing Values: - No Missing Values in Most Columns: For most of the columns (order_id, product_id, add_to_cart_order, reordered, user_id, eval_set, order_number, order_dow, order_hour_of_day, product_name, aisle_id, and department_id), there are zero missing values. This completeness is excellent because it indicates that crucial information about orders, products, and users is intact and reliable for analysis. - Missing Values in days_since_prior_order: There are 811 missing values in the days_since_prior_order column. This column indicates the number of days since the last order was placed by the same user, which is a critical piece of information for understanding customer purchase frequency and timing.

    sns.heatmap(merged_data.corr(), annot=True, fmt=".2f")

Interpreting the Heatmap - Color Intensity: The color intensity on the heatmap reflects the strength of the correlation between different variables. Darker colors (towards purple) indicate stronger negative correlations, while lighter colors (towards orange) suggest stronger positive correlations. A neutral color close to white signifies a weak or no correlation.

- Diagonal Line: The diagonal line with correlation of 1.00 represents the relationship of each variable with itself, which is always a perfect positive correlation.
- Correlation Values: The numbers in each square represent the correlation coefficient between the variables on the x and y axes. A coefficient close to 1 implies a strong positive correlation, meaning as one variable increases, the other tends to increase as well. A coefficient close to -1 indicates a strong negative correlation, where an increase in one variable corresponds with a decrease in the other. Coefficients around 0 suggest no linear correlation.

Specific Observations - Reordering and Order Number: There is a moderately positive correlation (0.33) between reordered and order_number, suggesting that products are more likely to be reordered as the number of orders increases.

- Days Since Prior Order: There is a notable negative correlation (-0.36) between days_since_prior_order and order_number, indicating that as customers place more orders, the number of days between orders may decrease.

- Weak Correlations: Variables such as order_id, product_id, add_to_cart_order, user_id, order_dow, order_hour_of_day, aisle_id, and department_id show weak correlations with other variables. This implies that these features might not have strong linear relationships with each other, though they could still be influential in a model due to non-linear effects or interactions with other variables.

Commentary on Value Counts The value counts for product_id highlight the popularity and frequency of specific products within the dataset. This information is particularly useful for understanding customer preferences and product demand. For example:

- Top Products: The most frequently purchased products, such as product ID 24852 (179 times) and product ID 13176 (140 times), suggest high popularity among customers, potentially indicating staple items in their shopping lists.
- Product Diversity: The presence of 5,091 unique product IDs in the dataset underscores the diversity of products available and purchased. This wide range of products reflects the varied preferences and needs of the customer base.
- Rare Products: Several products have been purchased only once, as indicated by a count of 1 (e.g., product IDs 4898, 44296, 33021, 49558, and 45955). These could be niche or less popular items, possibly catering to specific tastes or needs.

This output shows a DataFrame named `user_days_since_prior_order`, which appears to capture two specific pieces of information for each transaction in the dataset: the unique identifier of the user who made the purchase (`user_id`) and the number of days since that user's previous order (`days_since_prior_order`)

The histogram provided displays the distribution of orders throughout different hours of the day. The x-axis represents the hour of the day, ranging from 0 (midnight) to 23 (11 PM). The y-axis indicates the frequency of orders placed at each hour.

From this graph, we can observe several key points:

1. Lowest Activity in the Early Hours: There is a minimal number of orders placed during the early hours of the day, from midnight to 6 AM. This suggests that very few customers are placing orders overnight.
2. Increase in Activity in the Morning: Starting from around 6 AM, there is a steady increase in order frequency, which peaks in the late morning hours. This might indicate that customers prefer to place orders after the start of their day, possibly after getting settled at work or after breakfast.
3. High Activity During Midday and Afternoon: The highest frequency of orders occurs between 10 AM and 4 PM, with the peak at around 10 AM. This suggests that the midday hours are the most popular time for customers to place orders, possibly coinciding with their lunch breaks or daily planning periods.
4. Evening Decline: There is a gradual decline in order frequency from 4 PM onward, with a more pronounced drop after 5 PM. This could be because customers are less likely to place orders in the evening, potentially due to being occupied with dinner and winding down for the day.
5. Nighttime Drop-off: As the evening progresses, the number of orders continues to drop, reaching the lowest point at midnight.

[ ]: # Box Plot for days_since_prior_order sns.boxplot(x=merged_data['days_since_prior_order'])
plt.title('Boxplot of Days Since Prior Order')
plt.show()

This boxplot visualizes the distribution of the days since a prior order was made by customers. Here's how to interpret this boxplot:

1. Central Box: The central box of the boxplot represents the interquartile range (IQR), which contains the middle 50% of the data. The bottom of the box (the 25th percentile) seems to be at approximately 5 days, and the top of the box (the 75th percentile) is around 14 days. This indicates that half of the customers place a new order within approximately 5 to 14 days since their last order.
2. Median Line: Inside the box, there is a line that represents the median value of the data, which appears to be at about 8 days. This tells us that half of the customers place another order in less than 8 days, and the other half take longer.
3. Whiskers: The “whiskers” extend from the box to the smallest and largest values within 1.5 times the IQR from the quartiles. The left whisker goes down close to 0 days, which suggests that some customers place orders again immediately or very soon after their prior order. The right whisker extends to around 30 days, which might be the maximum allowed days between orders for this dataset or a set follow-up time period.
4. Outliers: The individual points on the right side of the boxplot, beyond the whiskers, represent outliers. These are data points that are significantly higher than the rest of the dataset; in this context, they indicate customers who waited longer than typical before placing a new order. The presence of outliers at around 30 days may suggest occasional delays in reordering or less frequent purchase patterns among a small subset of customers.

The boxplot provides a clear picture of how often customers are reordering, with most reorders occurring within one to two weeks. This information could be valuable for understanding customer purchase cycles and managing inventory accordingly.

#3.3.2. Data Transformation:

[ ]: # Handling Missing Values merged_data['days_since_prior_order'].
    ↪fillna(merged_data['days_since_prior_order'].mean(), inplace=True)

- Choice of Imputation: Mean imputation was selected to preserve the overall distribution of the data. This method assumes that missing values are randomly distributed and can be approximated by the average observed frequency of customer orders.
- Impact on Analysis: Filling in missing values allows for a more comprehensive analysis, as it avoids the potential bias that could come from simply discarding rows with missing data. It enables the inclusion of all customer transactions in further analyses, such as predictive modeling or customer behavior analysis.

It aims to calculate the number of days from the current day until a customer's next order based on their ordering patterns. The function takes three arguments: `order_dow` (the day of the week of the last order), `days_since_prior_order` (the number of days since the last order), and `current_day_of_week` (today's day of the week).

#3.4. Analyses / Modeling

- A Gradient Boosting Regressor : It estimates the time until the next order for a product.
- SVD algorithm: It is a matrix factorization technique commonly used in prediction systems for collaborative filtering
- Evaluation: The models are evaluated based on RMSE indicating their predictive performance.

This code iterates over groups of data based on ‘user_id’ using the grouped_data object. For each group (which represents a specific user), it selects the relevant features (‘order_hour_of_day’, ‘days_since_prior_order’, ‘reorder_ratio’, ‘reordered’) and uses the best_model to predict the days until the user’s next order. The predictions are then averaged across all predictions for that user and printed along with the user’s ID. This process allows for personalized predictions of when each user is likely to place their next order based on their historical ordering patterns and other relevant features.

The code uses collaborative filtering to predicts products to users based on their past purchase behavior. It first trains a Singular Value Decomposition (SVD) model on the user-product interaction data. Then, for each user, it predicts the rating (reordered or not) for each product they have not yet purchased. The top 5 products with the highest predicted ratings are recommended to the user. Product names are included in the recommendations by mapping product IDs to their names.

The analysis of results: The code generates predictions for the next set of products to be purchased by users. For each user, it provides a list of recommended products along with their predicted ratings. The predicted ratings indicate the likelihood of the user purchasing each recommended product, with higher ratings suggesting a higher likelihood. These predictions are based on the user's past purchase behavior and are intended to personalize the shopping experience by suggesting items that the user is more likely to be interested in.

It first creates a list of unique products and customers from the merged dataset. Then, it iterates through each product in the product list, checking if the product is predicted to be reordered. If the product is likely to be reordered, it further checks the timing prediction for the reorder. If the timing prediction is below a certain threshold (`threshold_days`), it calls the function `increase_inventory()` to increase the inventory for that product. Otherwise, it calls the function `maintain_inventory()` to maintain the inventory. If the product is not predicted to be reordered, it calls the function `decrease_inventory()` to decrease the inventory for that product.

#3.5. Summary of the outcome:

- The project succeeded in creating a system that predicts customer purchase behaviors, enhancing inventory management and personalizing marketing efforts. This allows for better stock optimization and targeted marketing campaigns.
- By predicting when customers are likely to reorder specific products, inventory levels can be adjusted accordingly—increasing inventory for products expected to be reordered soon and decreasing or maintaining levels for others.
- The project also facilitated personalized marketing by identifying products that a customer is likely to be interested in, based on past behavior. This enables sending tailored marketing emails with recommended products, increasing the chances of repeat purchases.

Value translation:

- Inventory Optimization: Improved inventory management through accurate predictions reduces the risk of stockouts and overstocking, leading to cost savings and increased customer satisfaction.
- Targeted Marketing: Personalized marketing efforts can lead to higher conversion rates and customer loyalty, as customers receive recommendations for products they are genuinely interested in.
- Enhanced Customer Experience: By understanding and anticipating customer needs, the project contributes to a more personalized shopping experience, encouraging repeat business.

and fostering a positive brand image.
